Introduction

This year, after a busy and exciting build-up phase of the Ecosystem Restoration Camps' project, Camp Altiplano, the current staff are ready to pass the baton, and move toward other ERC work and other fulfillments.

Effectively as Camp Altiplano's 'steering group', the goal has been to construct a camp and begin a restoration site where a team of experienced, dedicated, passionate people can take on the roles of running the camp once it is created. Ideally, we transition at that point to a majority of Spanish nationals within the staff team, to help embed the project in the local community.

Whilst there are still several building projects ongoing, we are now approaching this exciting turning point! Here we convey the information you need to know, to find out if applying to be part of the core team at Camp Altiplano would be the right thing for you.

This info pack covers:
- A brief introduction to the Camp's approach to management, work, decision-making, and communication
- A table outlining the roles and responsibilities
- Deeper individual role descriptions
- Application Details

For those not yet well acquainted with Camp Altiplano and what we do, please make yourself familiar with this ‘Background and Resources’ document: https://docs.google.com/document/d/1zvK2GvHKffX0_rGE-sYI3IesULvN3hv_ChYTWY1e5U/edit
Our Approach

Management and decision-making

The Camp is managed in a non-hierarchical way between the members of the core team. Each member of the team has an area of responsibility, in which they make small decisions independently, with constant awareness of how their decisions tailor in harmony with the rest of Camp activities. Bigger decisions with wider effects are taken collectively, with input and advice from all members of the coordination team. All take responsibility in supporting the overall running of the camp and its evolution over time. We plan as far ahead as possible, whilst acknowledging that circumstances are fluid, and planning will require adaptive iterations to remain coherent with reality.

Whilst the team has fixed core roles, we recognise that people aren't fixed in the same way. This means, that as time, the needs of the project, and people's own purposes evolve, their may be movement of people from some roles to others. All core roles are covered by someone, and effective communication ensures that only those suitable for a particular role end up taking it. Whilst other useful and interesting roles for the camp may emerge, they emerge alongside and not instead of the core roles outlined above.

Respect and trust

We listen to each other, give each other space when needed, and support one another. Our well-being is fundamental to the success of the project. In order to be able to welcome and host campers and ensure they enjoy their experience, the coordination team must establish wellbeing and trust, both individually, and collectively within the team.

We recognise each person as a complex being, and respect all parts of them - including other staff members, campers, neighbours, and visitors. We act from a place of trust, assuming positive intent, in the knowledge that this can bring out the best in everyone involved. We remember that each individual has both freedom and responsibility for their words and actions, and may be held accountable.
Open and honest communication

Living and working together in a remote location, with little private space and daily shared responsibilities, can be challenging. The situation requires regular, open, honest communication. We make space in our daily and weekly meetings where we can share anything that is on our minds in a safe and non-judgemental environment. We endeavour to ensure there are always opportunities for us to collectively resolve any issues or potential conflicts in a constructive and respectful way. This may involve creating extra meeting spaces, perhaps between individuals alone, or facilitated spaces as requested.

We believe a system operates best when all information is easily available to everyone. In this way we minimise bottlenecks of information, or tensions due to hidden facts. Many minds working together are less likely to make mistakes, and more able to solve problems once they arise.

Honest communication starts with self-honesty. If we are honest and open with ourselves, we can be honest with the team; if the team is honest with themselves, they can be open and honest with the campers, visitors, and wider community. Mistakes are an opportunity for change and development, and are treated as such, without harsh words and blame. This does not compromise the individual's accountability for their actions.

Care for the environment

We try to live in a way that reduces our impact on the environment, in recognition that we are one small human element in a much bigger ecosystem. We aim to reduce, reuse and recycle all our waste, sending as little as possible to landfill. We use natural cosmetics at the camp to protect the soil and water from chemical products. As far as our budget permits, we buy food that we cannot grow ourselves from local markets, and organic or regenerative producers. We create space for ourselves to reconnect with nature, knowing that as we can care for the environment, it can also care for us.

Building and collaborating with networks

Ecosystem restoration is needed on a vast scale, as rapidly as possible, in light of the rate of climate change we see now. This cannot be done on our five hectares of land alone. To achieve faster change we draw on the expertise and networks of the ERC Advisory board, the AlVeIAl Association, the Spanish board of the ERC, local experts and farmers, and members of the ERC. Our ambition extends beyond acting in isolation - we are reaching out, learning from others and sharing knowledge to have an impact that goes much beyond this. Diverse, interconnected projects and communication are the key to widespread change in humanity's ecosystemic role.

Entrepreneurialism, Creativity, Evolution

We recognise that the roles documented here are essential for the project, but are by no means ALL that Camp Altiplano could be. We honour the space for each team member to be creative and inspired, seeing new potentials for achieving the aims of the camp, and helping them to manifest. For this we invite a spirit of creative evolution within voluntary roles, and also further entrepreneurialism. Camp Altiplano is a space where businesses may be created, that either support the Camp and its team, or empower and support local people. Thought to these matters are encouraged.

Work and Remuneration

Some roles in the core team are more time-intensive than others. Many are seasonal, or fluctuating with the Camp’s rhythms as they change over the year. We look to those who are more burdened during any period, and match them with those who find they have the time and energy to support their colleagues’ activities. This includes members of the core team, not just short term campers, meaning that the applications coordinator may spend three days a week gardening for a while, for example; the project coordinator help to build a chicken coop; or the maintenance coordinator helping to host a course.

It is important to take enough time to relax and recharge. The core team works 8 hours a day, five days a week, on average. Holiday is discussed with the whole team, and the Spanish Board.

Members of the core team - up to 7 individuals - receive a stipend in recognition of their amazing efforts in helping Camp Altiplano to grow and achieve its goals. The stipend amounts to €3,000 divided by those individuals: €428 per month each when a team of seven.
